SATURDAY EVENING SEPTEMBER 21.

American Beef for England.
The steamship England, of the National line, sailed from New York a day or two ago with the largest single shipment of live cattle ever carried out of that or any other American port. It is said to be the first time that live cattle have been shipped from New York to England. The ship is carrying 1,400 head of cattle, averaging fully 1,400 pounds each, shipped by "N. Lee" Morris, of Chicago. In addition, E. S. Man & Co. shipped by the same steamer 1,700 quarters of beef, making the beef cargo carried alive and dead, equal to 1,425 cattle. The bloom that has for a year back revived the export cattle trade in this country shows, it is seen, no sign of diminution. Something like sixteen thousand head of cattle are shipped from American ports every week to Europe, from the ports of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other ports.

There is a small boom beginning in the sheep export trade likewise. The high price of beef in England has dragged along with it the price of mutton, and where no sheep of any consequence were sent out from America heretofore, several thousand go out every week now for England, chiefly shipped from New York, though they are American sheep.
